

KNOW THE VERTICAL

30-second scan before you dial. Know their pain before they say it.

SPA / SALONS / BARBERSHOPS

The pain: Delayed replies cost bookings. Requests arrive through DMs, texts, and calls at all hours and sit until someone can get to them. Staff answer the same pricing, prep, and aftercare questions between clients. Rebooking and package follow-up depend on someone remembering, so clients quietly lapse. Booking history, intake forms, treatment notes, and product purchases live in separate systems.

Probe: "How are booking requests coming in after hours, and who's answering them? Who follows up on rebooking and packages?"

RESTAURANTS / BARS

The pain: Inventory runs on guesswork. Food, perishables, and bottles counted by hand with no trend data, so ordering is a gut call – over-order and it spoils, under-order and you run out mid-service. Food and pour cost creep up without anyone catching it. The phone rings constantly during service with nobody free to answer, so reservations and private event inquiries get lost. Delivery platforms and the POS usually stay disconnected on top of it.

Probe: "How are you deciding what to order each week – is that off a system or off gut feel? And who's catching the phone during a rush?"

THE RULES

↓	10 full, deep inhale-and-exhale breaths before the first dial.
↓	Never excited. Talk like a colleague, not a closer.
↓	Match their tone — if they don't sound warm or upbeat, skip the pleasantries and get to the point faster.
↓	Slow down. Let the pitch breathe. Silence is fine.
↓	End sentences down-tone, not up.
↓	Say each number ONCE. Scale in Step 3, the client story in Step 6. Never repeat one.
↓	One value prop, every call. Same words. Master it.
↓	We're saving bullets, not unloading the clip.

THE VOICEMAIL

Four beats. Under 20 seconds. It has one job: get a callback.

↓	DROP YOUR TONE. Relaxed authority. End the line going down, not up.
//	PAUSE. Let it breathe. Silence is leverage.
bold	LEAN ON IT. Land on the bolded word. Weight, not volume.
um	SAY IT, DON'T SKIP IT. Gray italics keep you sounding human, not scripted.
SWAP	CHANGE THIS EVERY CALL. Purple = swap before you dial.

LEAVE THIS · IF NO ANSWER

“Hey NAME // this is REP NAME with Levron Labs // an AI consulting firm. ↓
 We help INDUSTRY businesses figure out where AI actually fits // and cut the manual work eating their day. ↓
 Figured it was worth a quick conversation. ↓
 Give me a ring back when you get a sec // REP NUMBER. // Talk soon.” ↓

Who we are. What we do. Why it matters. Call me back. That is the whole voicemail — no dollar figures, no hours, no pitch. Say your number SLOW, and twice if you can. Numbers belong on a live call where you can read the room.

DO NOT stack proof into a voicemail. If it takes you more than 20 seconds to say, they have already deleted it.

THE GATEKEEPER · ORG NUMBERS ONLY

"Hey // is NAME around?" ↓

[if they ask who's calling]

"It's REP NAME // from Levron Labs. ↓ // I had a quick question for them about their operation." ↓

[if they ask what it's about]

"We work with INDUSTRY businesses on AI and automation. // What we usually see is //

Short, peer-level, do not over-explain. Never say "sales call" to a gatekeeper. Only comes up on org/office numbers — mobile lines skip this entirely.

PICK ONE · SAME MATCH, SHORTER VERSION

SPA / SALONS / BARBERSHOPS — booking requests sitting unanswered and rebookings nobody follows up on.

RESTAURANTS / BARS — inventory ordered off guesswork and a phone nobody can get to during a rush.

A gatekeeper does not need the full pitch — just enough to sound legitimate. Pick the same vertical you'll use in Step 3.

...THEN CLOSE THE GATEKEEPER ASK

// so it's just a quick question // takes half a minute." ↓

"Half a minute" — same phrase as the Opener. Don't promise the gatekeeper a different time than what the decision-maker hears seconds later.

THE COLD CALL

One script. Every niche. Master it, then run volume.

↓	DROP YOUR TONE. Relaxed authority. End the line going down, not up.
//	PAUSE. Let it breathe. Silence is leverage.
bold	LEAN ON IT. Land on the bolded word. Weight, not volume.
um	SAY IT, DON'T SKIP IT. Gray italics keep you sounding human, not scripted.
SWAP	CHANGE THIS EVERY CALL. Purple = swap before you dial.

1 — OPENER · DISARM

“Hey NAME? (warm, like a colleague) // Hey NAME // this is REP NAME // over at Levron Labs. ↓ uh // I know I’m calling you out of the blue // but if you have half a minute // I’ll tell you why I called // and you can let me know // if it’s relevant or not.” ↓
IF YES → “Appreciate that.” → Step 2 (optional) or straight to Step 3.
IF NO / PUSHBACK → skip to OBJECTIONS, start with the first one (priority vs timing).

First “Hey NAME?” is warm and casual — like you already know them. Slight beat, then the real opener. One breath after that — do not pause for a yes. If they say yes, a quick “appreciate that” and roll. If they push back here, do not force the script — drop straight into objection handling below.

2 — NAME CHECK · TEMPERATURE READ (OPTIONAL)

“Before I jump in // does the name Levron Labs ring a bell at all // just by chance?” ↓
 [if no]
 “Gotcha // no worries. // Feel free to cut me off // if it’s not in your wheelhouse.” ↓

OPTIONAL — your read on how the opener landed. If it felt warm, skip straight to Step 3. If you want a quick temperature check first, this plants a seed (should I know them?) and costs nothing if they say no. Rep’s call, not mandatory.

3 — WHO WE ARE + WHY IT MATTERS

“So // uh // quick background // we’re a Silicon Valley based firm. ↓
We specialize in supporting INDUSTRY businesses with implementing AI and automation // whether that’s building fully custom software // or helping them adopt the right off-the-shelf tools. ↓
Um // across 100+ engagements // we’ve pulled back over 20,000 hours of operational time // and what we run into is almost always the same handful of things //

Company name already said in the opener + name-check — do NOT repeat it here. “AI and automation” now lives inside the specialize line below, said once. TWO numbers, one breath, and they answer two different questions: “100+ engagements” = have you done this a lot, “20,000 hours” = did any of it actually produce anything. Volume alone is not outcome. VERIFY the 20,000 figure before using it live — it has to hold up if someone asks how you got there. The specific client numbers still live in Step 6 only.

PICK ONE · MATCH THE VERTICAL YOU'RE CALLING

SPA / SALONS / BARBERSHOPS — booking requests sit unanswered in the DMs // the same prep and pricing questions get asked all day // and rebooking only happens if someone remembers.

RESTAURANTS / BARS — ordering comes down to guesswork // and the phone’s ringing off the hook during a rush with nobody free to grab it.

Read down, pick the one that matches who you’re calling, say it live. Agency line not included yet — flag if you want one added. Then continue straight into the close below.

...THEN CLOSE THE WHO-WE-ARE

“But it’s been clear that almost every owner and operator we talk to knows AI matters. ↓
They’re just not really sure where to start // or how to actually leverage it // to save time // to save money // and even make money. ↓
And so that’s the exact gap that we close.” ↓

The three outcomes (save time, save money, make money) name the payoff instead of restating the pain — the pain menu already did that thirty seconds ago. Straight from here into the questions.

4 — THE QUESTIONS · THEN STOP TALKING

“So real quick // are you guys using any AI or automation currently // or is it more of a gray area?”

[pause — let them actually answer]

[if they haven't already told you — ask:]

“And what's the biggest pain point // or the biggest constraint // for you guys right now?”

AI question FIRST — direct read on where they actually stand. Pain-point question SECOND, and only if they haven't already told you naturally in their answer above — do not ask it if they already covered it. STOP after each. Silence is leverage.

5 — REFRAME

“Yeah // that's what we hear a lot across the industry // and it's not on you. ↓

The tools are out there // but nobody is showing you how to actually leverage them.” ↓

Flex the first line to whatever they actually said in Step 4 — do not force it word-for-word if their answer was specific. This is a quick, natural reflection, not a monologue. Straight into Proof from here.

6 — PROOF · THE ONLY PLACE NUMBERS LIVE

“Like // we worked with a business spending 40 to 50 hours a month on //

[SWAP IN] // and we got that under 10 //

which is around $45,000 a year in operational time alone. ↓

That's even before you count the new opportunities that open up // like meeting more clients // you know // actually growing the business.” ↓

“business” swaps for the specific archetype below (e.g. “dealership,” “dental practice”) — not the generic industry name. “[SWAP IN]” swaps for that vertical's example. Both come from the same box below. Say it natural, not read as a list. One story, one set of numbers, said once. 40–50 hrs and $45,000 reconcile at $75/hr — do not repeat these figures elsewhere.

SWAP IN · MATCH THE VERTICAL YOU'RE CALLING

SPA / SALONS / BARBERSHOPS (salon or spa) — answering the same booking and prep questions and chasing down rebookings by hand.

RESTAURANTS / BARS (Mediterranean restaurant) — counting inventory by hand and guessing at what to order each week.

SWAP IN · MATCH THE VERTICAL YOU'RE CALLING

The word in parentheses is the specific "business" swap for that vertical — say "a dealership," "a dental practice," etc, not "an automotive business." Same color match as the Step 3 pain menu — same vertical, same color, easy to scan mid-call.

7 — THE ASK · MAKE IT EASY TO SAY YES

"So // super simple here // I know my timing's probably off //

I don't want to overstay my welcome // but just wanted to see if you'd be opposed to a quick 20-minute // coffee-style chat? ↓

We'll show you exactly where AI fits in your operation // what businesses like yours are doing // and how we'd approach it. ↓

And from there // if it's not a priority // you can keep us in your back pocket for down the road." ↓

[then book it — escalate the ask:]

"So // would you be completely against looping up sometime next week?" ↓

[if pushback / no calendar in front of them:]

"Are you more of a morning person // or do afternoons work better?" ↓

Humble, low-friction entry — we are in an adoption moment, not selling a staple, so "keep us in your back pocket" fits. The chat itself is the value (in the chat, not after). GOAL: just get them on the call — you pitch there. Escalate language: "opposed to a chat" first, then "completely against looping up sometime next week" to book — always a week, never a specific day this early. If they stall or have no calendar handy, fall to morning/afternoon to get a tentative time down. Say "businesses like yours" — never "competitors."

8 — LOCK IT · ONCE A TIME IS SET

"Perfect // I'll send a calendar invite right after this so you can confirm on your end. ↓

And hey // I know fires come up // so if something shifts // just suggest a new time or shoot us an email // and we'll figure it out from there." ↓

Say this once a time is even tentatively down. It removes the pressure of a hard commitment AND locks the next step (the invite). Acknowledging "fires come up" makes it easy to say yes now without feeling trapped — and gives you a clean reason to follow up if they go quiet.

OBJECTIONS — stay relaxed, never defensive. Most are reflex, not real.

► "Not interested - (start here if they said no at the opener)"

"No worries. // Before I go // is AI just not a priority right now // or do you guys have someone else on it?" ↓

FIRST smokescreen-breaker — this is where the opener's "if no" sends you. Their answer routes you: "not a priority / we don't do AI" the objection directly below; "someone else on it / we have a tool" the one after that. Opens it back up or confirms not a fit. Do not push.

► "We don't use AI / AI isn't a priority"

"That's fair // and honestly you don't have to like it. // Plenty of the people we work with still don't. ↓ But for them // it was never really about the AI. // They just wanted the hours back on stuff nobody should be doing by hand // and since we handle implementation // the team never has to become technical. ↓ So // I know I caught you cold here // and I don't want to take up too much of your time // but I guess // would you be completely opposed to carving out even 15 minutes for a coffee-style chat // just to see what that would look like for you?"

Hardest objection in the script — a stated belief, not a brush-off, so do NOT argue the case for AI. "You don't have to like it" ends the argument instead of continuing it. "It was never really about the AI" dissolves the belief AND the priority version at once. "Since we handle implementation" answers the real fear underneath without naming it. Usually fires EARLY (right after you say "AI and automation"), so this ask often lands with no questions asked and no proof given — that is why it gets the humble entry. "Even 15 minutes" reads as a concession, not a request.

► "We already use [Company] / already have a tool for that"

"Definitely puts you ahead of most // and honestly // our best customers were already using some kind of AI and automation when we met them. ↓ But nearly every time we sat down // it was solving one piece // while the biggest constraint was still sitting there. ↓ So // would you be completely against carving out 20 minutes for a coffee-style chat? // You'll leave knowing exactly what else is on the table // and what that's actually worth to you."

Never asks them to admit their tool was a bad call — people defend those decisions instead of examining them. They started something, it works, there is just more available. Nothing to defend = nothing to argue with. Say "tool" or "using something," NOT "provider" — most of them bought a tool, they do not have a vendor relationship.

► "I don't have time"

"That's exactly why I'm calling. ↓ The whole point is getting you time back. // Give me 20 minutes // and if I can't show you where you'd save hours a week // you never hear from me again." ↓

► "Send me an email"

"I can do that // but quick // is there something that's not clear right now I can just answer for you? ↓ Sometimes it's easier in 60 seconds here than buried in your inbox." ↓ // [answer it, then loop back:] // "I'll get that over to you // but for the time being // would you be completely opposed to putting a quick meeting on the calendar? ↓ Once you've seen the info // if it's not relevant // we just cancel it // no problem." ↓

"Send me an email" is usually a soft brush-off. Surface the real question first, answer it — then loop straight to the soft-book. The cancel-anytime frame makes the yes cost nothing. Do not just file yourself into their inbox to be forgotten.

► "How much does it cost"

"It varies case by case // it really depends on what we find. ↓ Tell you what // give me 20 minutes // and we can get you a ballpark // based on how big the problem is and how much value we can uncover." ↓

► "Push for answers ON the call"

"Good question // and that's exactly what the time is for. ↓ I can't give you anything real until I understand how you actually operate. // That's why it's a conversation first // not a quote." ↓

THE RULES

↓	10 full, deep inhale-and-exhale breaths before the first dial.
↓	Never excited. Talk like a colleague, not a closer.
↓	Match their tone — if they don't sound warm or upbeat, skip the pleasantries and get to the point faster.
↓	Slow down. Let the pitch breathe. Silence is fine.
↓	End sentences down-tone, not up.
↓	Say each number ONCE. Scale in Step 3, the client story in Step 6. Never repeat one.
↓	One value prop, every call. Same words. Master it.
↓	We're saving bullets, not unloading the clip.